If there's one game out there that has a very long history, one that is quite difficult to accurately write out, it's definitely poker. The game itself is thought to have evolved over the course of 1000 years or more, taking its inspiration from various other games. One of the first games very similar to poker is thought to have been invented around 969 AD by the Chinese. The Emperor at the time, Mutsung, is reported to have okayed 'domino cards' on New Year's Eve. Of course there are losses but you are free to elaborate your own winning secret. There are lots of people spending huge amount of time building strategies. It happens in all the games, roulette is not an exception. You can work out your own route to the win or use the experience of previous generations. But there is one thing you should take notice of.
